On behalf of the Illinois College Family Association – we are so thrilled your student has chosen IC as their home away from home!

As parents and family members, you play an important role in the academic success of your student. This calendar provides the information you need to assist your student in finding answers to his or her questions. We also provide relevant tips as you help your student transition into a new phase of life, including ways to empower your student to make positive decisions, get outside of their comfort zone, and navigate new experiences with new people. We value all you do to support your student’s success and we want you to feel connected to the College and a part of your student’s education.

This calendar has been created especially for you. In these pages you will find information about when students will be focusing on exams, when they will be looking forward to a big campus event, and when they should know about important deadlines. Whether you use it as a planning tool or a conversation starter, I hope you will find it valuable throughout the year. All of us at Illinois College are committed to helping your student thrive as they develop qualities of mind and character needed for fulfilling lives of leadership and service. Thank you for entrusting your student to us. We look forward to supporting your student and connecting with you throughout the years to come.

Sincerely,

Karen Homolka
Assistant Dean of Student Success

What’s Happening With Your Student

Whether returning to campus after being away for the summer or leaving home for the first time, your student will be adjusting to a new living arrangement. Encourage your student to discuss expectations and plans with their roommate(s) prior to arriving to campus.

Homesickness seems to be an inevitable part of adjusting to college. Dr. Josh Klapow states, “homesickness is a very normal reaction to periods of rapid change and adjustment (such as college).” and “at its core homesickness is a longing for the familiar.” Help your student understand these are normal feelings and that most students are having or have experienced these same feelings.

Becoming familiar with his/her new surroundings is invaluable to alleviating these feelings. If possible, it’s very important that your student remains on campus for the first six weeks to accomplish this familiarity. Getting involved, meeting new people, and finding their niche will help them acclimate to college. Staying connected with your student will also help during the transition.

What’s Happening With Your Student

Students can become overwhelmed with multiple syllabi and different teaching styles of various professors. This is when academic coaching can be extremely helpful. Walking through each syllabus with an academic counselor looking for important information and due dates can help students feel in control. This will also assist in time management. This is a great time for students to visit the Center for Academic Excellence and find out about all the resources across campus.

Engage your student in a discussion of how many extracurriculars to commit to in the semester. Helping them to dive into one or two student organizations can really assist in their transition to college. Sometimes students want to join too many leaving them feeling overwhelmed and not doing any of them well. It’s better to commit to one or two that they can do really well rather than five that they can’t give as much time to.

The reality of living with a roommate and managing life independently (laundry, time, meals, etc) can become all too real for some. Knowing one’s resources and seeking assistance early in the semester is crucial. Encourage your student to seek assistance as needed.

What’s Happening With Your Student

Academic wellness is important during this month. Students may be preparing for midterms, first large assignments, or overall exams. Learning to manage time, like studying gradually throughout the week rather than cramming it all in one night, will alleviate stress.

Conversing about the importance of eating right, getting enough sleep, and prioritizing is also a great talking point at this time to remind students to take care of their own personal well-being.

Beginning October 1st, you can also file the Free Application for Federal Student Aid (FAFSA), so this is an excellent opportunity to have a discussion with your students about finances.

Homecoming and other social activities kick into high gear during this time. The temptation of experimenting with alcohol can become a reality for some students. Knowing how to set boundaries and helping students make good choices is crucial at this time.

During this month, students will be asked to make course selections for the following semester. Encourage your student to seek help from his/her academic faculty advisor or an academic coach.
What’s Happening With Your Student

Thanksgiving Break is right around the corner, so make sure you communicate with your student about Break and travel arrangements.

Flu season is upon us, so encourage your student to take precautionary measures to battle illness. Health Services is an excellent resource on campus to help keep your student healthy. In addition, getting 7 to 8 hours of sleep per night is an important goal for all.

It is about this time of year that some students believe they can solve their problems by transferring to another institution. At this point, students should be encouraged to give IC at least a full year’s try. Remind your student that they may have a worse experience at another institution, and many situations that seem impossible in the first semester often disappear later in the year.

If your student is preparing to graduate in the spring, make sure to remind them to fill out their graduation form before December 1st!

November 2019
What’s Happening With Your Student

Final exams are quickly approaching so this would be an ideal time to send your student a letter of encouragement or a small “good luck” care package!

After finals, students are often worn out after a long semester of hard work so be sure they get some rest and relaxation. Students are also happy to have family time and catch up on all that has happened since they left in the fall.

Students may struggle with the independence they found at college and the expectations at home. This is a good time to reassure your student you understand their new found freedom, however, mutual respect is equally as important.

This may also be a good time to figure out what your student is doing for the summer. Discuss the importance of experiential learning opportunities such as traveling abroad and BreakAways. Internships are always valuable as well! It is important that students think about this now, as applications and letters of recommendation will be due in the spring semester.
What’s Happening With Your Student

Some students will be overly excited to return to campus, but for some the twinge of homesickness they felt in the fall will return. Assure your student that they’ll adjust quickly once back into the routine of the semester.

This is an important time to have your student reflect on their grades from the previous semester and set goals for the upcoming semester. If they didn’t get involved in anything outside of the classroom during the fall, remind your student that it’s never too late to check out a new student organization through the Center for Student Involvement.

What’s Happening With Your Student

Encourage your student to apply to present at the annual Celebration of Excellence held later in the Spring semester. This is a great time to showcase academic work they are proud of!

Late February and early March is the time of mid-term exams and projects. Stress is likely to be high. Staying focused on goals and utilizing campus resources, such as the Campus Writing Center and Speech Lab, are keys to success.

Many students are planning Spring Break - most IC students relax, work, and visit with family and friends. Others will go on a BreakAway or travel with the Alternative Spring Break trip.

Encourage students to attend Black History Month events. Understanding one another’s cultural backgrounds fosters a sense of community students can be proud to be a part of!

Encourage students to beat the winter blues by joining in Spring Intramurals or hitting the pool or weight room in Bruner Fitness Center.

What’s Happening With Your Student

Many students are headed away from campus for Spring Break. Regardless, of where they choose to spend it, encourage your student to stay safe, get a few moments to relax, and then be ready to finish the semester strong!

This is the time to kick good academic habits into high gear - the power of study groups, good sleep, and staying ahead on course material can’t be overestimated!

Students will need to begin thinking about what courses to take for next year’s fall semester. It’s important to schedule a meeting with their faculty advisor ahead of the course registration date.

What’s Happening With Your Student

The weather is warming up, so students may want to spend more time outdoors, so make sure your students are still staying on top of his/her academics and studying.

Final projects, exams, papers, and presentations are due, so stress levels may be high. If your student stays organized and manages their time effectively, then the stress will be naturally alleviated. Encourage your student to take it one day at a time and to use the resources that the Center for Academic Excellence has to offer.

This is also the time students may be declaring a major or thinking about summer internships. Career Readiness and Experiential Learning is a popular resource utilized at this time to sharpen the student’s resume, cover letter, and interviewing skills to prepare for summer opportunities.

Graduating students need to get their cap and gown. If your student is considering graduate school, make sure all of their applications are in by the required deadlines as well as any required exams (GRE, MCAT, LSAT, etc.)
What’s Happening With Your Student

Speak to your student about his/her summer plans. Some students may be staying in Jacksonville for internships or summer jobs, others will be preparing to return home. Make sure your student has their fall plans finalized including their housing and roommate selection.

This is a time of transition, whether students decide to stay in Jacksonville or return home. It will be different without classes and having friends from college around. This transition may be difficult for a short time, but with support will not last long.

What’s Happening With Your Student

Summer is a good time for students to do some self-exploration to see which major or career options they may want to research or pursue. It’s also a good time to reflect on the previous year and all of its successes and challenges.

During this time, students may take summer classes at local community colleges as well to make up more credit. Make sure your student has met with someone from our Registrar’s Office to ensure those credits will transfer over to IC.
What’s Happening With Your Student

Tensions may arise due to students’ increasing independence. At this point in the summer, students are missing their college friends. This is a time of change as your relationship begins to transition into an adult-to-adult relationship. It’s important to keep the lines of communication open and make expectations clear.

Students may be living away from home for the first time during the summer due to jobs or internships and may be missing family vacations/events. Keep in regular contact with your student to help them feel connected.
